2 Marco is eight years older than me. He's my brother, but sometimes he's more like a parent. He gives me money when I need it for rent or food. He gave me a room in his house when I first started school. He even protected me from our neighbor's angry dog when I was little. He's great, but he doesn't always tell me the truth. I mean, he never tells me when he has a problem. He doesn't want me to worry.

When I was young, I was afraid of the dark, so I always slept with a small table lamp on. One night, I couldn't sleep. I got out of bed and went to the kitchen to get a glass of water. When I came back into my room, I stepped on something. As I fell onto the floor, the glass of water flew out of my hand, and the light went out. It was so dark and I was so scared. I was sure that there was a monster in my room and that I stepped on its foot! I screamed and screamed. My parents came running into the room to see what was wrong. By then I was crying and I couldn't really talk. My father turned my bedroom light on, and my mother picked me up off the floor and put me into my bed. After I calmed down, I said that a monster turned my lamp off when I stepped on its foot. Then my father bent over and picked something up. It was a stuffed animal! I tripped on it and accidentally unplugged the lamp as I fell down! We all laughed and laughed about it. Then my parents plugged my lamp back in and cleaned all the water off my floor.

2 READING

A Read the comment by a podcast listener, Opinionzzz. Check (✓) the problems that he writes about. Circle the ones that Steve and Teresa already mentioned.

Opinionzzz wrote:

I hope we never have flying cars of any kind. I think even flying ambulances are a bad idea. Why? Well, first of all, if everyone is flying cars in the sky, we'll have traffic jams in the air! And imagine a car accident in the air – flying car parts might fall onto people on the ground. People in the flying cars might even fall out!

Second, we already have a lot of air pollution. I think that flying cars would create more of it. The air in big cities would be horrible.

Third, cars break down all the time. When your car breaks down, you just pull over to the side of the road. What will you do if your car breaks down in the air? Your car would probably just fall to the ground. That might destroy your car and even hurt someone else ... or worse.

I definitely don't think we should have flying cars. Let's find other ways to get ambulances to people more quickly.

NOT JUST FOR KIDS

1 READING

A READ FOR DETAIL Read the article and complete the sentences with information from the text.

Why Do We Binge-Watch TV Shows?

How do you watch shows? Do you watch one episode a week? One a day? Or do you sometimes watch entire seasons in a weekend? If you like watching episode after episode of a series, you're not alone. Binge-watching has become more and more popular in the past few years. But why?

STRESS RELIEF When we binge-watch, we escape from our real lives for a few hours. While we're watching, we don't think about our problems or responsibilities. That can help us relieve stress.

HAPPINESS According to experts, when we binge-watch, our brains produce dopamine – a chemical that makes us feel happy. As soon as one episode is over, we start the next one because we want to keep feeling good.

CARING Psychologists say that our brains can experience things we watch on TV almost the same way that they experience real events. So we often become attached to stories and characters and really care about what happens to them. Because our brains aren't always good at separating episodes on TV from real life events, we have a strong desire to keep watching to find out what happens next.

Based on this information, it seems like binge-watching is a good thing – at least in the short term. However, over time, experts say that it can cause depression. When we finish binge-watching a series, we can feel a sense of loss. We can also feel sad because our brains stop producing dopamine.

- 1 When we binge-watch, we can forget about our _____ and _____.
- 2 Binge-watching helps us get rid of _____.
- 3 Binge-watching makes us feel _____.
- 4 When we see something happen in a TV show, our brains think we're experiencing it _____.

2 READING

A Read the comment by BusyBee221. Then read the statements and check (✓) the ones that are true.

BusyBee221 wrote:

After I listened to the latest episode of Tips with Tina, I immediately decided to try Andrew's tips for saving time. Like Tina, I'm always losing my keys. I also spend a lot of time looking for my wallet in the morning. So, I put a bowl on the dresser in my bedroom, and I started putting my keys and my wallet in it when I got home every evening. I tried it for a week, and it really made a difference. Before, I used to feel rushed every morning, and I would sometimes get to class late, but now I don't feel rushed at all. I got to class on time every day last week, and I even had time to stop for coffee on my way to school. The second tip was harder to follow, but I did my best. I managed to say "no" to one invitation last week when my friend invited me to a movie. I felt guilty about it for a while, but I was really glad that I refused the invitation. While my friend was at the movies, I finished my paper for my history class. It felt great!

So far, Andrew's tips are working for me. I think they'll keep saving me time in the future.

I ordered four boxes of your Cookie Bites last week because a friend of mine recommended them to me. They were delivered yesterday, and they're almost all gone! My roommates and I loved them. I had to hide one box in my room so they wouldn't be eaten by my hungry roommates. I bought four different flavors: chocolate chip, peanut butter, double chocolate, and coconut. The chocolate chip and peanut butter were my favorite kinds. Although I love chocolate, the double chocolate ones were a little too rich and sweet for me. I'm sure the coconut cookies were delicious. However, I never got to try one because my roommates ate them all. I'm so excited to try the rest of the flavors!

The Helper Experiment

by Thomas Holley

I recently heard that helping others is a good way to achieve happiness. I wondered if this could be true, so I decided to try it. I came up with an experiment: for one month, I would do at least one nice thing for another person every day. This could be anything from holding a door open to taking care of a sick friend.

On the first day, I saw my elderly neighbor carrying a heavy trash bag to the trash can outside. She was really struggling. I went up to her and asked if I could help her. She gratefully gave me the bag, and we started walking back toward our apartment building. When we got to the front door, she thanked me and invited me into her apartment for a cup of tea. We chatted over our tea for a while, and then I went home. I have to say, I felt great! I felt like I did something important that day and made my neighbor's life a little easier.

Over the next few days, I found myself doing more than one nice thing per day. On my day off the first week, I spent almost the whole day looking for people to help. I wanted to figure out exactly why helping people was making me happy, so I did some research. I found out that there are a number of ways that helping people affects us. For example, helping people can increase our self-esteem and confidence. Doing something nice for another person can also give us a sense of purpose. In addition, when we volunteer on a regular basis, we feel a sense of belonging to a group.

During that month, I think I probably did at least a hundred nice things for others. Since then, I've kept up doing at least one helpful thing per day. If I didn't have to work, I would help people all day long! I've even started volunteering at the hospital. I think everyone should try this experiment. It can make us all happier.

2 READING

A Read the anecdote. Answer the questions.

When I was about 12 years old, I was mad at my best friend Andy because another boy told me that Andy had said mean things about me. I was so upset. Andy asked me what was wrong, but I wouldn't tell him. I wouldn't say anything. After a while, Andy was mad at me, too. We stopped talking to each other. I was miserable and I didn't know what to do. I wanted my best friend back, but I was still angry with him. After a couple of weeks, Andy and I both made new friends and we never talked to each other again.

That was a mistake that I won't make again. As I've gotten older, I've learned that it's important to tell your friends and family why you're mad. You might find out that there's actually no reason to be angry. Or you might discover that they had no idea that they had done something you didn't like. Years later, I found out that the other boy had lied to me. I felt bad that I had destroyed my friendship with my best friend just because I didn't tell him what was bothering me.

- 1 Why was the writer upset with Andy?

- 2 What did the writer do about his situation with Andy?

- 3 How did the situation affect his friendship with Andy?

Development of this publication has made use of the Cambridge English Corpus (CEC). The CEC is a multi-billion word collection of contemporary spoken and written English. It includes British English, American English, and other varieties.
